A Scalped Man's Story. BENNETTSVILLE, S. C., June 19, 1876. To the Editor of the News and Courier: In your issue of the 15th instant there is an article copied from the Kansas City Times headed "A Scalped Man's Story." In it occurs the following: "It has often been said that a man can live after being scalped; but until last Friday no ocular proof had been produced in this city sub-stantfating that fact." In the early history of the colonies this fact was substantiated on many an occasion when the first settlers had to contend with the savage and blood-thirsty Indians, who inhabited the whole country, and who were Addre ever ready to pounce down upon their unsuspecting victims. An instance of a scalped man living to tell his tale occurs to our mind, which happened during the Proprietary government of South Carolina. In the year 1715 South Carolina was visited with an Indian war so formidable as to threaten its total extirpation. The numerous and powerful tribe of Indians called Yemassees were the most active in promoting this conspiracy. These tribes possessed a large territory, lying back from Port Royal island, on the northeast side of Savannah river, and they harbored the mest inveterate rancor against the Carolinians. They often sallied forth in small scalping parties and infested the frontier. In one of these sallies Dr. Rose fell into their hands, whom they cut across the nose with a tomahawk, and left him scalped on the spot, apparently dead, but he happily recovered.

Other instances occurred when the State was a royal province of Great Britain. Atter the reduction of Fort Duquesne, in 1758, Cherokee hostilities commenced in South Carolina, especially in the northwestern portion thereof, or, as it was then called, the back settlements. The settlers suffered greatly from privation and calamities. Many were killed in cold blood. Several who were scalped and otherwise badly wounded had the good fortune to recover, though they received no aid from regular physicians or surgeons, and the women and children were oftener the subjects of these barbarities than the men, who were generally killed outright. These instances are taken from Dr. Ramsay's History of South Carolina.

A letter from Superior, Wis., dated June 5th, says that the head of Lake Superior is still covered with ice for twenty miles down of a thickness of ten to twenty feet, and for miles it is anchored along the shore; and there is but little prospect that the lake will be clear for twenty days. It seems hardly worth while to go to the expense of thawing out so late in the season.
